Howard's End Peter van Onselen, Phillip Senior

An insider's look at the Australian 2007 election and its implications, this political document goes behind the scenes of both the Liberal and Labour parties upon the announcement of the election campaign. In one camp is John Howard, the most experienced politician in the country, who has faced some of the toughest opinion polls of his career since the start of 2007. In the other camp is Kevin Rudd, a rookie politician who seems unable to make a misstep. This chronicle and analysis will make sense of the result of the election and its far-reaching outcomes for the people of Australia.
