BAIT! Life Outside the Federal Witness Protection Program (911 Reloaded Series) Terrence W. McMillin Esq.

A true story of events, but not exactly the truth. The conspiracy opened when the author made a report to the Las Vegas Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in June of 2004. Afterwards, her sickening thought was this: the man she dated for years believing to be a legitimate business man and had a son with might have been using her as some sort of cover to blend in with society. She subsequently took all the needed steps to get away from him. In the years that followed, it occurred to her she had more enemies against her than just him.

In March of 2005 he was arrested by a Homeland Security/ICE Operation Task Force Team in a raid. He was being held at the North Las Vegas Detention Center without bail, under high end felony charges linked to terrorism. Somehow, and for some reason, he was let out of prison after six months free and clear.

Designed as an overview of the last six years, it is far from the full course of events, victimization and crime. This first short story was written for a Clark County Nevada District Court Case and remains on file in Las Vegas. The case title is Asset Acceptance LLC assignee of Citibank verses Susan Knisely, case number A529439. The author's Response to a Writ of Execution, explains why the defendant has no assets for the Plaintiff to collect upon.

Neither the author nor her son was ever enrolled in federal protective programs under the law by the FBI. This first in a series of short stories gives the reader a sense of what life is like outside the federal witness protection program: BAIT.
