Approximately, 15 million people are unemployed. Simply put, landing a job today is an extreme uphill challenge, considering the large number of graduating students combined with the rising number of the unemployed. Currently, college graduates find themselves competing with other individuals who are more seasoned and experienced for basic entry level positions in their career field. Therefore, a different type of strategy is needed during economic turbulence. Job Strategies for the 21st Century provides practical solutions to the challenges that today's college students face when attempting to find employment in an unstable economy. This book is especially designed for frustrated parents, anxious students, bewildered professors and educators, and those who deeply care for college graduates. Dr. Daryl Green and Mr. William Bailey offer sound, proven, and practical strategies to help increase the chances of being considered for employment.
