Finally, a book for students with disabilities that ties them directly into the curriculum at their level! Too often students with severe disabilities are ignored or not placed in general education classes like science. And when they are placed in classes, they do not have the academic supports to take on the material. In addition, competing IEP goals also limit a student's ability to participate in a class. But no longer. Combining some commonly seen IEP goals and introductory writing skills, students can be introduced to material their classmates are learning focusing on exposure to vocabulary, giving students a chance to learn the words in context of the class. Included in this book is a list of vocabulary for a student to write with a pencil or type on a device of choice. For slightly more advanced students, fill in the blank sentences and some activities to help supplement a student's academic focus in the classroom.
