This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1906 edition. Excerpt: ... both shall have become citizens of the country of disembodied souls. Now it often happens that people in whom this sort of love exists mistake its nature and significance; imagine that they were born for each other; and, so they are, but not for the life below. They marry, and, to their first surprise, and subsequent horror, discover that for all the purposes of matrimony one is oil, the other water, without a particle of mental lime to combine and fuse the two together, and thereby form a true kalsomate of soul. "I think the pity of this earthly life Is love. So sighs a singer of the day Whoso pensive strain my sympathetic lay Sadly prolongs. Alas! the endless strife Of Love's sweet law with cold Convention's rules; The loving souls unloved; the perfect mate, After long years of yearning, found -- too late I "The treason of false friends; the frown of fools; The fear that baffles bliss in beauty's arms; The weariness of absence; and the dread Of lover, or of love, untimely dead, -- Musing on these, and all the direful harms Th.it hapless human hearts are doomed to prove, I think the pity of this life is love I" So do I. But even a greater pity exists where, fired by the most ardent hopes, one or both find out that not a real tie of soul binds the twain together. Then comes the unveiling; and, my God, what an awful, horrible spectre stands frowning where each expected to behold and hold-- she an Adonis, he a perfect Hebe! When the mistake is made such parties marvel and wonder how on earth it can be so; and why the actual marriage produces effects so utterly foreign to their expectations and hopes. In the union of two such there is a compatibility of spirits to a great extent, but none whatever on the amative plane, -- the sex of form;...
